THE REAL HUGHES

Hughes never charged anybody as much as his services were worth. He received a $10,000 fee for his work with the legislative insurance committee last year, although very few men of his professional standing would have been satisfied with less than $25,- 000.

He is a man of tireless industry. As one of his friends said, "His only vice is overworking." He appears at the executive chamber in the state house at 9 o'clock every morning, where he expects Mr. Robert H. Fuller, his private secretary, and Col. George Curtis Treadwell, his military secretary.
To have his mail ready for him, and with a short interval for luncheon, he works uninterruptedly until 6:30 or 7 in the evening. Then he goes home to dinner, but often returns to the state house again and remains there till midnight, or until he clears his desk.

Col. Treadwell, who has occupied a similar relation to several other governors, says that Mr. Hughes dispatches his business more rapidly than any man he has ever known, and looks after the details of administration more thoroughly than any of his predecessors.
He has a very keen eye for details, and in visiting state institutions goes through them from garret to cellar and notices everything. He makes no notes, but carries his impressions in his mind and, at the first opportunity, calls the attention of the commissioners in charge of that particular institution to the defects he has noticed. He is making the rounds of the charitable and educational and reformatory institutions supported by the state, but the officials never know when he is coming. If business at the office happens to be slack, he sends Col. Treadwell to make the necessary arrangements and takes the first train to some hospital or insane asylum or reform school, and surprises the superintendent and his assistants. He does the same with the National Guard, in which he takes a great interest. Like the Emperor of Germany, he often turns up at an armory at unseasonable and inconvenient times. Previous governors have left matters of detail to their subordinates, but his bump of in-quisitiveness is very highly developed, and he has gone into everything connected with his administration with the same thoroughness that characterized his practice as a lawyer.

It is said of Mr. Hughes that when preparing a case he educates himself concerning its technicalities until he becomes an expert. He has mastered several sciences since he graduated from college. When he was retained by a beet-sugar company he would not go into court until he had learned enough about the business to qualify him for superintendent of a factory.
When he had a suit involving a patent for an automatic organ he had an instrument sent to his house, took it apart, put it together again, and learned by practical inspection the technicalities of construction.

By the application of these same methods in the investigation of the state institutions he has familiarized himself with every detail, and is therefore able to go before the appropriation committees and tell how much money is needed, what it is needed for and why it should be expended.

The governor is a man of method and system and order, and that is one reason why he is able to accomplish so much. When he was five years old he prepared a memorandum entitled "Charles E. Hughes' Plan of Study," in which he divided the days into hours and assigned each hour to a particular purpose. He has carried that rule with him throughout his life, and attributes much of his success to its observance.

He has an extraordinary memory, which was displayed during the insurance investigation, when he conducted the examination of witnesses almost entirely without notes. Between sessions he informed himself on the subjects concerning which he intended to draw out evidence, and was able to retain the points in his mind without making memoranda. He is equally remarkable as a mathematician, and would have made a successful accountant if he had turned his attention that way. His talent enables him to understand the most complicated accounts, which would puzzle an ordinary lawyer, and he displayed it in the legislative investigations which he conducted into the affairs of the gas companies and insurance companies of New York.

Gov. Hughes is affable, genial and unassuming, but never loses his dignity, never permits familiarities, never plays, has no taste for society, and, although he belongs to a number of clubs in New York city, seldom crosses their thresholds. He is not what is called "a clubbable man." He never indulges in careless talk. He weighs every word he says; is always exact in his statements, and, as one of the veteran newspaper men at Albany remarked, "He never shoots off his mouth." The correspondents who come into contact with him every day describe him as "a very cold proposition," but admire him for his ability, sincerity and singleness of purpose. They say that he is absolutely non-partisan and impartial; that he is "always on the square"; that he never misleads anybody, and makes no pretensions. They regard him as the ablest man who has sat in the state house for many a year, and almost without exception are confident that he will be the next President, although with them, as with others, he maintains that stolid indifference concerning his nomination that I described in a previous letter. Some of them consider this attitude a novel method of "playing politics," but the others believe that the governor actually prefers to be leader of the New York bar rather than sit in the White House.

Gov. Hughes is a man of deep religious convictions, and has always been active in church and Sunday school work. He is now president of the Baptist National Association. His grandfather was a clergyman, and was founder of the Baptist Bible Society.
His father, the Rev. David C. Hughes, a Welshman, has preached from a Baptist pulpit for forty years. His mother is a devoted Christian woman of Scotch-Irish stock. Both of his parents were born in Great Britain. His wife was Antoinette Carter of Brooklyn, daughter of the senior member of the firm of Carter, Hughes & Cravath, with which the governor was connected at the time of his marriage. The firm was broken up at the death of his father-in-law.

Gov. Hughes is a member of the Fifth Avenue Baptist Church, New York city, which is attended by John D. Rockefeller and family, and organized and taught for several years the famous Bible class of which John D.
Rockefeller, Jr., is now the teacher.
When at home he lives at 570 West End avenue, near Riverside drive, south of Grant's tomb on the Hudson.
Neither Governor nor Mrs. Hughes takes an active part in fashionable society. She is a graduate of Wells College, where she was a classmate of Mrs. Grover Cleveland, and has intellectual tastes. She came to Albany a stranger, but has won the respect and admiration of the people of this city by her charming personality, her tact and her modest dignity.

Gov. Hughes' ability as a lawyer was abundantly demonstrated by his conduct of the investigation into the affairs of the gas companies and the insurance companies, and by his conduct of important legislation before he came to Albany, and has recently been vindicated by a decision of the supreme court confirming the constitutionality of the public utilities act, of which he is the author.

He is what a friend and admirer described as "a constructive reformer." He builds up, but does not tear down.
He tries to promote the interests of the corporations and the public at the same time, as is illustrated in his public utilities act, which was intended as much for the protection of the railways as of their patrons. He secured the enactment of this law, which gives the commission the power to fix rates for passenger and freight traffic, and
